As several improvisational musicians have put it before, free improvising is like walking on a tightrope, with or without a safety net below, in risk of falling down really hurting yourself badly, or most of the time, making it through successfully without any heavier damage done. It's like tightrope walking of the most intense level – also called funambulism. So here we are. The Funambulists are three non-academic improvisers from Subotica, Vojvodina, Serbia walking on tightropes above different areas of free music, rock, free jazz, noise etc. - making the freest music they are able to. Three musicians, active for more than two decades in local and regional rock and experimental music scenes, heading together as a trio from the summer of 2020 on an adventurous journey of improvisation and jazz.
